father, a four-year-old Boxer named Bruno, who won the first place twice," he said, adding that he also owned a Rottweiler and an Alsatian.

Pet-n-You, one of the sponsors of the event, organised an agility demonstration which attracted a lot of attention. Among the competitions were Space Idol where dogs paraded in interesting attire and showed off their tricks, Fastest Eating Duo where dogs and their owners had to finish a set amount of food in the shortest time and the Dog-Owner Lookalike Competition.

There were also doggy play zones, mazes for dogs to find their owners and agility training equipment that included a wading pool set up

Many booths were also set up by exhibitors and sponsors, showcasing products and services including dog food and nutrition, pet apparel, accessories, pet beds and bags.

Pet Positive president Anthony Thanasayan, who was also the guest of honour, was pleased to see the positive change in people's attitude towards dogs.

"It is important to me for people to accept my dog everywhere I go as I depend on him a lot," Anthony, who is disabled and takes his service dog wherever he goes, said.

The annual charity event was hosted by UPM's Faculty of Veterinary Medicine's Zoological Club and all proceeds will be channelled to Pro-Kasih, its community catch-neuter-release project which aims to control the population of stray cats in the campus.
