

Varsities do their bit

The students and staff of public and private institutions of higher learning have shown that they can be just as benevolent and helpful in times of need, as could be seen when they came to the aid of those devastated by the recent floods.

Just a jab: Universiti Malaya volunteers being vaccinated before leaving for their humanitarian mission to Kelantan. Over 70 volunteers made their way to Pasir Mas, Kelantan to clean up schools.

What a mess: Universiti Putra Malaysia volunteers worked hard to clear the destroyed items from the thick layer of mud in Rantau Panjang and Pasir Mas, Kelantan. As many as 150 volunteers from the varsity were involved in the effort.

Ready to go: University of Nottingham Malaysia Campus (UNMC) staff posing with some of the donated items and supplies they helped to pack for flood victims in Kuala Lipis, Kuala Krau and Kerdu in Pahang.

All labelled: The National Youth Skills Institute (IKBN) director Wan Sallam Wan Yusuf (left), checking to ensure the boxes have been properly tagged. Over 40 IKBN employees travelled to Gua Musang, Kelantan to help out with flood relief work.

Tedious task: Volunteers and students of SK Pasir Gajah, Kemaman, Terengganu, helping to carry desks and chairs back into the class from the higher floors of the school building.

Monetary aid: Pahang Menteri Besar Datuk Seri Adnan Yaakob handing out envelopes with cash donated by Yayasan Pahang to 1,600 students in Kuantan.
