

Structural Vibration Absorber Device – An Innovation to Minimise Risks during Earthquakes

Researchers from Universiti Putra Malaysia (UPM) have successfully developed an innovation called “Structural Vibration Absorber Device” which absorbs vibration caused by an earthquake and thus, prevents damage to buildings and reduces risks of deaths.

The device is applicable to various types of buildings, including conventional buildings, and it can function in a different range of earthquake intensity to protect buildings against ground vibration.

Furthermore, the device is not only limited for application in buildings, but is also suitable for bridges, vehicles, machinery, jetties, railways lines or any structures that are exposed to any types of vibrations. Read More
